

Amy Moritz, M.Ed.

Amy Moritz received her bachelor's degree in art education and her master's degree in school counseling from Penn State University. She holds her Pennsylvania educational specialist II certification and a certificate in Chemical Dependency Prevention and Treatment.

Moritz worked in the York County public schools as a school counselor and teacher and then transitioned into state government service. Her leadership experience in government led to several years in private industry where she led a team of educators, designers and researchers in the development of educational products for young children.

In 2012, Moritz returned to the education sector where she currently holds the position of strategic partnerships managing coordinator at the Center for the Promotion of Social and Emotional Learning (CPSEL). She has been instrumental in launching CPSEL, coordinating the annual SEL Conference and building partnerships with organizations throughout the country to promote social, emotional and character development. Moritz also provides professional development to educators on a variety of SEL-related topics. She is a certified OLWEUS Bullying Prevention trainer, a certified SAP trainer, a certified Lifelines Suicide Prevention trainer, and a certified PQAS trainer.
